"Menopause: A New Paradigm"

Learning Objectives: In my nearly five decades of practicing Obstetrics and Gynecology, menopause has always been taught as a stage in a woman's life that a woman needs to either endure quietly, be treated symptomatically with antidepressants or herbal supplements, or risk serious side effects like breast cancer or strokes, by allowing herself to be treated with one of various types of "hormone replacement therapy", if she could get her doctor to prescribe them.

In this talk, I will help you understand menopause using a Darwinian approach, and compare it with other relevant stages of life to see IF we should treat it, and if so, HOW to treat it effectively and safely.
